THURSDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 21, 1861. [COMMUNICATED. VIRGINIA .- BY J. B. JOHNSON.

The cause which was most prolific in the production of all those revolutions which have blessed or cursed the world, arose from the attempt of one nation to force upon another, institutions for which it was not by genius or education adapted. Is not the North endeavoring to press upon the South those anti-slavery and fanatical institutions which its pursuits and education cause it constantly to repudiate? Does not the South, in obedience to the Constitution, proclaim that the negro is not the equal of the white man, and that he is therefore, not entitled to the right of voting, citizenship, or of holding office of trust or emolument? Does not the North in opposition, not only to the South, but the Constitution, hold and violently teach, that the negro is the equal of the white man, and that he is not only entitled to the right of voting and of citizenship, but to hold offices of trust and carolument? Has not this sentiment generated in the bosom of the North an implacable hatred against the South; and has it not, like a simoom, withered every conservative tongue that dared to utter a word in vindication of Southern equality in the | deed and sixty fables, and sixty illustrations, 75 Territories? Has it not usurped the judicial, legislative and executive ermine of the North and Northwest, and like a tornado ifax Gentleman," "Head of the Family," &c., 75c. harled from official power every individual who had the temerity to say that the pegro was not the equal of the white man? Will it not soon have within its mad lingers every department of the General Government, and | Dr. A. Tholack. S2.25. is it not pledged to use its every effort to make the negro constitutionally the equal of the white man?

This insane philanthropy against the positive laws of the Creator, upon the subheart of once healthful America, and caused her to perish in the addered path of barbarous officiousness and discontent. It has made her welter in the vavenous gaze of those of her children who, with impious motives, wrested from her imperial grasp the sceptre of her existence; and in the midst of the bright blaze of her stainless name, they have, with Cain-like ferocity, turned it against their brothers. These facts alone, should be sufficient to indicate the feeling of the North; and the most active of the negative, admit that "the South has cause for complaint," but leave us to ty's Directory for 1861, published by Messrs. guess against what, or whom.

What has rendered the bonds of the Union oppressive? The conduct of the South and obedience to the Constitution? Has foreign influence made the Union so painful to bear? If not from these causes, then the idea of Virginia getting her constitutional rights in it, is totally ridiculous. If the Constitution, shallowed by the pure efforts of our forefathers, is not in itself sufficient to excite an obedient submission in the majority; and sectionalism is deterprove it "a covenant with hell, how, we would respectfully ask, is Virginia to get her rights in the Union? Beg or compromise them, is her dernier resort in the Union. Must Virginia, the mother of the Constitution, so far forget her dignity as to beg the North to give her her rights under an instrument of which she is the creator? Must she parley with those who have grossly insulted her pride and honor for the poor privilege of being one of the Union; and say to the North, if you will not do so again, I will give you my tribute for your welfare, and my sons for your defence !-Will she thus eachew all things of good report, and take the side of aggression ?-If she does not secede, she must do one of two things, either compromise her rights, or take the side of the aggressor. If she does either, she is unworthy of the proud position which she assumes to claim. Will she submit from option, and peril her equality from fear of momentary interruption of her external relations? She has violated no law, exercised no doubtful power, nor attempted to force her institutions into any State or Terricory. Therefore, she is guiltless of the present unhappy condition of the political affairs of this country. Then ibaldi. The Washington of Italy, Inc. why does she lag behind to argue with fanaties, about the violation of those laws which | the Child of the Penirie, by Rose Kennedy. they disregard with as little hesitation, as they fail to observe them with respect. · Alexandria, February 19, 1861.
